Mr. Dubois declared in the course of a short speech that he would not with draw from the position he had taken against the repeal bill, even if the penalty of expulsion were visited upon iana, wh se language on that occas on, he said, was more fit for a barroom than a senate.

After a speech by Mr. Call against any change in the rules, notice was given by Mr. Quay of an amendment to the repeal bill. Mr. Butler then took the floor and inveighed against the propositions of Senators Hill and Mills. He remarked that the party in power was bent on mischlef. He declared that if the propositions of Senators Hill and Mills were adopted there would be bedlam in the senate, if not anarchy, Continuing, Mr. Butler reached a point where Mr. Hill arose and said: I understand the secutor to say that if a majority refuses to compromise with a minority the bill ought not to

As there had been frequent outbursts of applause all through the discussion between Mr. Butler and Messes. Hill and Palmer the attention of the vice president was called to this last infraction of good order and the vice president seriously warned the visitors that he would order the galleries cleared if the disorder were again repeated.

Thereupon a well-dressed man in one of the galleries loudly declared that as he had been a conspicuous offender he would withdraw, which he did without trouble.

Mr. But er resumed the floor; disclaimed the idea that any of the plaudits of the galleries were intended for him, and intimated that the galleries had been packed for the benefit of the senator from New York Continging, Mr. Butler drew a ludicrous picture of Mr. Mills and Mr. Sherman joining in a cerdial, loving, voluptuous
